SIIA Honors Industry Veterans with Impact Awards
Association also highlights long-standing members of Education Division

Washington, D.C. (May 26, 2011) – The Education Division of the Software & Information Industry Association (SIIA) honors Kathy Hurley, senior vice president of strategic partnerships for Pearson and the Pearson Foundation, with its prestigious Ed Tech Impact Award. SIIA also presented new impact awards and highlighted long-standing members of the division during the recent Ed Tech Industry Summit in San Francisco.

During a special awards ceremony, Hurley was presented with the award by last year's winner, Tom Greaves of The Greaves Group, as SIIA highlighted her accomplishments and contributions to the education technology industry. With more than 35 years of experience in education technology, Hurley currently serves on several key industry and education advisory boards, including the SIIA Board of Directors, and has been at the forefront in leading the charge for 21st century skills, acting as chairman of the Partnership for 21st Century Skills (P21). Hurley also plays a major role in developing key partnerships from around the world for Pearson, helping the company to develop new approaches to innovative educational solutions.

In addition, SIIA presented new Member Impact Awards to individuals active in the Education Division, who have supported SIIA by promoting membership to ed tech companies, then mentoring them to build SIIA involvement. They received these awards for their leadership on the Education Board, multiple Division Committees and Working Groups, and special support over recent years, enabling SIIA to provide leadership, advocacy, business development opportunities, and critical market information in the education technology space. The Member Impact Awards were presented to:

- Lillian Kellogg, vice president of client services for Education Networks of America (ENA)
- Farimah Schuerman, managing partner of Academic Business Advisors
- Pat Walkington, principal of Pat Walkington Sales and Marketing

"During their years of service, these honorees have made outstanding achievements that benefit the entire education industry," said Karen Billings, vice president of SIIA's Education Division. "Their hard work and dedication have helped innovative ed tech ideas flourish, making them worthy recipients of SIIA's Impact Awards."

Sixteen companies also were recognized by SIIA for helping to support the ed tech industry through their long-standing membership of the association. Member companies recognized at the awards luncheon included:
